

Invitation

RSPH Masterclass with Glenda Sluga

Wednesday February 3, 2021, 9 - 11 AM

Mode: Zoom meeting

The Research School Political History (RSPH) offers Masterclasses by prominent political historians. Masterclasses are open to RMA and PhD students, and affiliated members of the OPG; others can attend on invitation only.

In this Masterclass, prof. Glenda Sluga will present her upcoming book Inventing an International Order after the Napoleonic Wars (Princeton University Press). Participants will receive two chapters that will be discussed with prof. Sluga. A selection of PhD students and other scholars will be given an opportunity to present the way their own research relates to the work of prof. Sluga in a short position paper.

Prof. dr. Glenda Anna Sluga is an Australian historian who has contributed significantly to the history of internationalism, nationalism, diplomacy, immigration, and gender, in Europe and Australia. She is Professor of International History at the University of Sydney. Currently she is Professor of International History and Capitalism at the European University Institute in Italy, where she is Director of the European Research Council Project ECOINT and Joint Chair of the Department of History and Civilization and the Robert Schumann Centre for Advanced Studies.

Supervisor of the Masterclass is prof. dr. Annelien de Dijn (Utrecht University). She is Professor of Modern Political History and chair of the Political History Department at Utrecht University.

Participation in Master classes is not obligatory, yet when registered, all participants are expected to come prepared and to have read the literature. Participation is rewarded with 1 EC when you have prepared a position paper (1000 words) and a short presentation of your comments or questions on the theme of the master class.

Registration

Participants need to register at bureau@onderzoekschoolpolitiekegeschiedenis.nl before January 28 2021. After we have received your registration we will send you two chapters of the new book by prof. Sluga, as well as a Zoom link for the Masterclass.

Abstract

Over the last few decades, historians have reshaped the spatial and conceptual contours of intellectual history. In particular, the prospect of a global intellectual history has provoked reflection on methods and questions of representativeness that transcend the default national parameters of this sub-field. In my lecture, I want to invite into these historiographical developments the place of women, and a specific international framing of ideas and their agents. My aim is to outline a history of European “International Thinking” from the turn of the 19th century to the mid-20th century, with women at its centre. I argue that the history of women and international thinking requires us to expand not only where, but who and what counts in intellectual history
